

The best books ever

- Author Gamar Fargab pseudonym
- Hunger Games is the number one best book ever
- We can write a better book
- And take the top spot

Group Visualisations

- Data profile of the top 100 books
 - Mean of page numbers
 - Correlation between page numbers and rankings
 - Ratio series to one off book
 - Frequency of genres
 - Correlation between awards and genre
 - Correlation between awards and ranking

(Possible graph overlays)

- Profile of the middle or mediocre 100 books
 - Produce the same visualisations as above for the middle group
- Profile of the bottom 100 books
 - Produce the same visualisations as above for the top group

Direct Visualisations between Hunger Games and Group

(Possible graph overlays)

- Bar charts for Hunger games against top 100
 - Mean page numbers
 - Normalised mean rating
 - Mean awards
 - Genre frequency

Visualisations of the Exploration of key relationships

- Ranking against location
- Think we should say something about the potential English language bias but I am not sure of how to do this.

- Ranking against location
- Awards against publish year
- Ranking against year of first publishing

The best book ever visualisations (our book)

(The model book what does it look like)

- The data points where hunger games is more than one standard deviation from the mean
- The books that fall within 1 standard deviation of the Hunger Games off set
- Our final profile that combines the two points above

Recommendations

- Based on our findings, we could then recommend three books
 - These books would be from the list e.g.
 - “To kill a mocking bird”
 - Increase page number/ make part of a series
 - “Animal Farm”
 - Set it in America, widen genres, increase pages
- Write a book like the above but with our added recommendations to score top spot.

MCA Wildcard

- I noticed some possible historical inflection points that might help a books popularity possibly
- Animal Farm (published just after world war 2)
- To kill a mockingbird (during American civil rights)
- The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (the height of the space race)
- The Hunger Games (Post the rise of reality TV possibly)

(May be something in this but can we show it)